NOTE ON DISCONTINUED OPERATIONS

Campus Communications, Inc. (CCI) dba The Independent Florida Alligator, in its educational role provides the opportunity for college students to train in the crafts of publishing a daily newspaper. The College of Journalism and Communications at the University of Florida teaches the same in their journalism classes, but without the hands-on experiences allowed students at the Alligator. Because of distance from campus and financial requirements, the education through internships to journalism students usually is limited to the larger daily newspapers.

This had left a large gap in educational opportunities for students to learn community journalism. Although the many community newspapers throughout the state would prefer it otherwise, they cannot afford to fund internships for journalism students to learn by experience. Therefore the opportunity to learn community journalism was absent.

To resolve that gap in education, when a nearby community, commercial newspaper (High Springs Herald) was listed for sale, CCI purchased it through a newly-created for-profit corporation, The Herald Publishing Company, Inc. (THPCI), a wholly-owned subsidiary of CCI. That subsidiary purchased the High Springs Herald and renamed it The High Springs Herald.

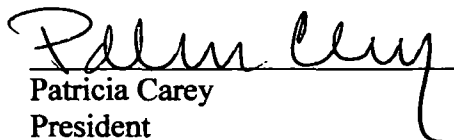

Due to its educational role, CCI subsidized The Herald Publishing Company, Inc., dba The High Springs Herald, because THPCI never was able to make a profit. But for more than 18 years, many journalism students were able to gain the experiences in community journalism that was intended.

Due to the continued losses of THPCI, the board of directors of CCI instructed the president of CCI to sell THPCI. The CCI board was concerned that with the general downturn of advertising revenue across the nation, and that CCI depended upon through the sales of student salespeople in training, CCI would not be able to continue the expense of subsidizing THPCI.

Because of those continued losses it took several years to find a buyer. Finally, there was one who was willing to purchase the corporation by assuming all of the corporation's debts with the exception of the amount owned to CCI.

The CCI board of directors approved this contract of sale and the transfer of ownership was accomplished February 20, 2009.

This left the amount of $307,000, a long-term note-receivable from THPCI in the financial accounts of CCI, with no ability of it being so. Therefore, that amount will be deleted from CCI's accounts as of close of business day, April 30, 2009.
